CONCORD PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Graduate explains why C-C is special

Concord's historic commitment to public education is reflected in the strong continuing support for excellent schools. Concord students excel due to the dedication of parents, teachers, staff, administrators, and community members. Philip Lavelly, CCHS Class of 2010, captures the sentiments of many students in the following:

Concord Carlisle High School is not simply a school to learn academics. Throughout my four years at high school I have learned so much as a person and have had opportunities to become who I want to be. After moving all my life and finally settling, I couldn't be more pleased than to be a member of the Concord-Carlisle community. The teachers at CC are incredible and interesting people, devoted to their jobs and highly passionate about what they do. It has been a privilege to be taught by and to work with these teachers. They are great at guiding you inside and outside of school, but what they do best is inspire you to learn more or do more with what you have. I have personally developed interests in certain subject areas that I have never been intrigued by simply due to some of the outstanding classes I have been in. The commitment teachers have to their students, athletes, and professions is exceptional, and too often we take it for granted.

More importantly though, CC has been able to offer me things other schools or towns can only dream of. For faculty and administration to support things like Challenge Day and Freshmen Orientation, or to fully endorse a play like "Falsettos," is remarkable. Nothing more than mere support is needed for students to thrive and fully engage in the community. No matter how small an effort the school and community make to encourage students or to support them, that one small step makes all the difference. The bonds and friendships that are fostered at CC will last a lifetime and always leave an impact. Lives have been changed and entire families and communities affected because of the amazing people who invest in the school and in each other.

Concord Carlisle's commitment to scholarship and citizenship is something to be proud of and celebrate. Happy 375th, Concord.
